Growing awareness and desire for new models of governance is commencing based on the move to Australia becoming a Republic. The tax system is revolutionized with concessions for social enterprises and direct payments to individuals to purchase support along with a national insurance scheme. Concerns relating to population growth and the appropriate infrastructure to ensure a sustainable community increases to pressure government and critical decisions need to be made including that of a rapid public transport system instead of increasing road infrastructure.

The political make-up shifts with the move from the major political parties to that of the independent representation which is indicative of the shift for greater presence of the individual voice in the political and law making processes. Community driven governance is demanded with service users voice increasing in intensity along with the move to the Commonwealth purchasing services from the State. A new mechanism of government is further emerging.
